Richard Dudman, a veteran St. Louis Post-Dispatch reporter on Southeast Asian affairs, has returned home after being held prisoner hy Communist guerrillas in Camhodia for 40 days. He was captured and released with the two other correspondents mentioned in the article. In this article he describes the sophistication of the enemy in knowledge of the United States, its troop movements, its our resistance weakened.

In all of these discussions there was never any denial that the Viet Cong and North Vietnam have a lot of troops in Cambodia, although both the National Liberation Front (Viet Cong' and Hanoi maintain the fiction that they are not involved. The guerrillas did not admit openly the presence of outside troops, but it was im-plied in a number of things they Yogi, the former Cambodian Army officer who joined the guerrillas as a plain soldier the day before Norodom Sihanouk was ousted, touched on this point one day. With more candor than the others displayed, he said he could see that the Cambodian United National Front could not succeed by Itself but that it must have the sunport of the people of Leos, North Vietnam and the National Liberation Front of South Vietuam.

No Hard Sell

There was an informal air to our discussions, which usually were with Anh Hei, the political chief of our five guards.

There was no hard sell to the approach. Nor, except in one instance, was there any catechizing. We were not asked to repeat what they told us. What they were doing was telling us

Anh Hai, whom we came to like personally, told us one night that 21 governments had recognized Sinanouk's government inexile, whereas only Solcon, the United States and a few others had recognized the regime of Prime Minister Lon Nol. leader of the March 18 coup.

Sihanouk is well known in Cambodia, Anh Hai said, and led his country in 15 years of peace. Lon Nol. he went on, is little known and has brought war to the Cambodian countryside. He said that Lon Nol had doubled the pay of the Cambodian government's soldiers but that morale remained poor.

"Six of Lon Noi's 30 battalions have come over to our side during the month of May," he seid. The others sit home. Youth is with us. Those young men who came from across the rice paddie to help us." he said, recalling a night when our Land Rover went off the road, 'they were not asked to come. They heard of the difficulty and that we were from the revolutionary front and came to help."

We had seen for ourselves the willing help given hy the young men, but we had no way of knowing whether we were hearing the truth about desertions or about the recognition of the rival Cambodian governments. The U.S. State Denartment savs 24 nations have recognized the Lon Nol regime against 17 for Sihanouk

Anh Eai was both critical and scornful of American policy in Southeast Asia. He said: "President Nixon's invasion into Cambodia has played right into the hands of the DRV (North Vietnamese) and the NLF.

"First, the invasion has brought the Cambodian and Lactian people together in a

American aggression. "Second, it has taken troops out of South Vietnam and has made it easier for us to fight the Americans there. Finally, it has made new difficulties for Nixon in the United States, strengthening the opposition in Congress and among students."

Scorn for Foe

A veteran of 100 battles against both the French and Americans, Anh Hai was disdainful of his enemy. The American strategy in Camhodia is easy for us to counter." he told us. "They all stay together. When they go to a place. we go somewhere else. We just stay out of their way. We ara happy when they use up their ammunition and fly their

"You have traveled with us several times by truck at night and you see how we live. We keep moving. Wherever the Thieu-Ky (South Vietnamese) forces are not, there we are. "They are nowhere; we are everywhere." Anh Hai said that if American troops had not been sent to Cambodis, "the Lon Nol gov-ernment would have collapsed," and added: "If Nixon had sent only weapons, we would have captured them."

The guerrillas have a shrewd understanding of America and a sophisticated grasp of how deeply the country is torn by the war. Their knowledge comes largely from nightly Vietnamese lan-guage news hroadcasts of the British Broadcasting Corp. They listen to the BBC more than to their own radio stetions. On one occasion Auh Hai remarked: "This is the BBC. This is not propaganda."

Names of some of the major members of the U.S. Senate were familiar to them, especially J. William Fulbright of Arkansas, Mike Mansfield of Montana and Eugene J. Mc-Carthy of Minnesota, who have been critical of American policy in Southeast Asia.

The guerrillas were watching developments on the Cooper-Church amendment, designed to assure that American troops are not kept in Cambodia heyond June 30. They knew about the so-called fact-finding committee that President Nixon sent to Phom Penh to report on the American invasion of Cambodia. They had great hopes for it at first, but since the group was made up of bawks and Nixon administration supporters, they soon changed their called it a fraud. They listened to their radios every night for news of any new student demonstrations in the U.S. or protests against the war.

Word for Fulbright

Some of our discussions were not of high callber. There was a 30-year-old Vietnamese pho-tographer who came to take pictures of us. A non-stop talker, he told us he had spent six years in the liberation movement, first as an undercover agent in Saigon and then as a guerrilla in Cambodia. His two sisters were secret agents in Salgon, he said, one of them with an assignment to shoot Americans from the back of a motorbike. He claimed she could shoot a pistol with either hand. Talking on, the photographer urged me to give a special mes-sage to Senator Fulbright. You must tell him for me that what he needs is not many strategies but just one strategy.

"He should just go end live and work with the poor and oppressed. Where there is poverty and oppression, there is war. Where poverty and oppression are eliminated, there is Deace.

Then, epparently struck by second thought, he added: "Before you give this message to Fulbright, I would like to check it with my superiors since I am just an ordinary soldler."

I worried at times lest the guerrillas think we could he used as propagandists for their revolution. I was airsid that perhaps we had been too docile in our responses. The worry was fed by several other developments. Once, Anh Sai said that by living with them, we could write articles "and meybe a book of great historical significance about the successful war of one small nation egainst the U.S. which would be read around the world, especially by other small nations that want to oppose the U.S. and want to know how." At the guerrillas' request, Mike had written two or three articles about our experiences, which, they said, would be transmitted to his news agency. But, like the single letter each of us was allowed to write, they never use us as propagandists. I made up my mind that if such suggestions were made, I would quote the old American saying, "My country, right or wrong; if right, to be kept right; if wrong, to be set right." I would try to make them understand that I could never work for a foreign government. After four weeks of captivity we were worried and doubtful. We were sure we would not be killed, but we couldn't tell how long we would be held. On June 7, our first month was up, and there was no firm indication whather we would be released soon or held for the duration of the war, perhaps to be "re-educated."

Good Answer'

About this time we began to get a few hopeful hints. One day Anh Hai asked how long we would like to spend in the "liberated zone" if we could have our preference. He noted carefully that it was just a hypothetical question since it had not yet heen determined thether we were "good people" -that familiar phrase we had first heard the day we were "Good answer," said Anh Hai. A der or two later Anh Tu asked if we missed our families. We said, "Yes, very much." He then told us he hadn't seen his for seven years and that a month or two would not be very loog. Our families would be happy to see us if we were released at the end of that time.

he said. On June 9, after our escape from the helicopter attack that had brought us and our guards closer ingether, Anh Ba began to reminisce, "Do you remember oo the day you were 'arrested," and you were sitting tied and blindfolded?" he asked,

"I was the one who gave you water and loosened the ropes and said that you would not be shot and that if you were truly journalists you would be freed. That was a very dangerous

A Smiling Giant

Wa heard a step on the rickety ladder leading up to the door of our but, and then there appeared the smiling face of the hig, authoritative man whom we had not seen since the day of our capture. He was in a plain khaki uniform. There was no evidence of his rank as North Vietnam's senior military officer in that region, as I judged him to be.

Followed by a natty side with a red bandana knotted around his neck, the commander stepped into the little room. With a powerful grip and using both hands, he shook hands with each of us. Our visitors sat down opposite us. Then, over tmy classes of tea, the big officer smiled and asked elmost teasingly. "why do you think I'm here?"

I said, "I hope It is that you heve found that we are what we said we were."

"Yes," he replied. "That is it. You will be released. The decision has been made by the general staff of the United Front of the Cambodian nation under Norodom Sibanouk that you will be released as soon as arrangements can be made. This took a long time because of this war situation."

The whole interview took only about 10 minutes. The commander said he could not stay with us long.

"I must leave," he said. "And you must be prepared to walk 13 miles tonight."

This is labor melodrama about Irish terrorists in the Pennsylvania coal country in the 1870s and how they were apprebended by a detective who joined their ranks. He then betrayed them and they were hanged. It is a singularly static film. The grim background is persuasively drawn, but the action of the story is stillted as is most of the acting, with Richard Harris as the deceitful dick, Samantha Eggar as the mining town girl who almost marries him and by Sean Connery as the leader of the anarchist band. Televising Americans in Paris

By Hebe Dorsey

PARIS, June 25.—Bienvenue" (Welcome), produced by Guy Béart, is the best television variety show going in France-at least, judging from the ratings.

"We have 85 percent of the listening audience, the highest ratings on French TV," Guy Beart said. "Our show runs right after the 8 p.m. news, which means we reach a very wide audience." Since as Mr. Béart says, "Bienvenue" is a cheap show to produce, it is obvious that he is on a sound track, so to speak.

For his show yesterday, to be telecast next fall, Mr. Beart thought it would be a good idea to gather 'Les Américanis de Paris." A pretty mixed bag it was, as somebody noticed. which prompted a blonde who inst entered the room to say: Mixed bag, who me?"

Anyway, Mr. Béart invited, among others, Ernest Goldstein, former adviser to - President Lyndon B. Johnsoo; Sim Coppans, famous for his jazz program on French radio; Dr. Frank Malina, rocket pioneer and a kinetic artist; comedian Jess Hahn; painter .William Einstein and graffiti connoisseur William MacLean. From the fashion world, Mr. Béart lifted Dorian Leigh, who runs a model agency in Paris, and Vicki Tiel, who owns a boutique with Mia Foossagrives on the

Last but not least, Mr. Beart (who is also a composer and singer on the side) had captured the best tazz in Paris. He bad Mezz Mezzrow and his orchestra sitting in with Bill Coleman and his orchestra— Benny Waters, Mickey Baker plus Michel Gaudry and Marce Blanche. Add to that pianist Art Simmons and for another break Marpessa Dawn (star of "Orfeo Negro"), Jennie Bennett (who created "Hair" in Paris), Gordon Heath (of l'Abbave) and you had just about the best old-style jazz session since those Paramount films in the thirties. Sculptor Barbara Chase Riboux came too but she promptly dropped out because she felt the show wasn't serious enough. In a way, she was right. It was fun but not exactly serious. Nor was it intended to be.

Mr. Béart calls his show "Bienvenne" and he means it. The minnte you arrive in his studio, pretty girls push a drink into your hand and ask if you have any furmy story to tell. You soon find you need that drink. Before anything happens, you sit around for a couple of hours, that's show

Around 6 p.m. everybody finally walks on the set, hot as Haitl, with flood lights, three cameras . and mikes dancing over your head. For ambiance, Mr. Beart also throws in longlegged lovelies and long-haired: boys who can do anything, including the Charleston. Beart, who is terribly friendly, smanges all his guests on circular orange and hot pink cooches, sorting them out as ina Vasarely puzzle. Sim Coppans was on a real hot seat—right over an ashtray. Just so there's no misunderstanding, Mr. Beart announced immediately: "This is a mad show." Everybody applauds. And from then on, with genial improvisation, everybody on his own-imtil 3 a.m. Art Simmons fell asleep on a friend's shoulder, who gently nudged him and said: Hey, be careful, the cameras are on you:" Upon which Mr. Simmons woke up and started applauding madly.

On a more serious beat, Mr. Goldstein talked about life with President Johnson, and Frank Malina recalled his pioneer days as a rocket scientist in Pasa-dena, Calif., "when there were three of us and we were called the suicide commando." Dorian Leigh didn't get around to discussing the model business but announced she got married for the seventh and last time. Bill Coleman said he fell in love with Parls back in 1935 because of, among other things, Camembert and the Eiffel Tower. Gordon Heath said Saint-Germain-des-Prés was no longer what it used to be and Mr. Einstein spoke of the early days in Montparnasse and how expensive it was to get a cup of coffee at the Deux-Magois.

New Dictionary No Cop-Out On 12,000 American Words

By Alden Whitman

NEW YORK (NYT). - The transitive verb "demoralize," meaning to corrupt the morals of, to deprave, is pure American, Indeed, its purity traces to Nosh Webster, the 19thcentury American lexicographer, who coined it-his only impro-

Words like "demoralize"and there are 12,000 of themare one of the chief features of a newly published dictionary that has been 17 years in the compiling. It is the second edition of Webster's New World Dictionary of the American Language, a World Publishing Company enterprise. It is not related to any other Webster dictionary.

In town last week to talk about his handiwork was David B. Guralník, the dictionary's amply bearded 50-year-old editor in chief, appropriately bespectacled and furrow-browed. Lunching on hash (it derives from French) but sipping a martini (that is an Americanism), Mr. Guralnik chatted amiably about the Americanization of English.

"Few people realize until they see it in print," he said in his precise scholar's voice, how many Americanisms there are and how rapidly the number is growing.

A Few Examples

"Almost everyone recognizes 'gerrymander' Ito divide a voting area so as to give one party an artificial advantagel as an Americanism, but what about 'telephone,' 'geriatrics,' 'hash-house,' 'freebie,' 'kick-stand,' 'electrician' (Benjamin Franklin gave us that), 'im-migration' and 'lipstick'?' They're Americanisms, too."

Not all Americanisms were minted in the United States, Mr. Guralnik went on. Some are old words that Americans have given new meanings to. "Tough," for example, is a perfectly good Middle English adjective meaning strong but pliant. As an Americanism, of course, it means overly aggressive or brutal or rough, To signify Americanisms, the dictionary marks each with a star preceding the entry.

How do Americanisms come about? the lexicographer was ssked. "Language," he replied without groping for a word, "is an ever-growing organism. Americans are inventive, and they apply old words to new situations, and when they've done it often enough, they invest the old word with new meanings. If they didn't do that, the language would stultity and die."

Guide to Acceptance A dictionary's role, Mr. Guralnik believes, is to be a recorder of language. "I'm neither per-missive nor prescriptive," he said, "and I think we should

Although the new dictioners includes much slang, all labeled as such, it is missing a halfdozen or so Anglo-Saxonisms that are part of common speech and appear in many current

Mr. Guralnik denied this omission was a cop out (which is listed in the dictionary as slang, meaning to back down on a principle or the like) but said that it was made in deference to teachers, schools and states that might not buy the dictionary if such words were included. "I know we couldn't sell a copy in Texas if we put them in," Mr. Guralnik con-

Policy-Making in the Senate

resolution may not be a fair test of the Senate's capacity to cope with current foreign policy. The criss-cross of motives and impulses that have been bogging down Senate debate since the Cambodian crisis erupted is, after all, not a very normal state of affairs.

Nevertheless, when an administration that has been fighting senatorial restraints on its activities abroad supports the abrogation of the act that is the chief legislative basis for American military activities in Southeast Asia, and when the principal senatorial foe of the resolution votes against repeal because the Republicans have stolen his thunder, it does suggest the complexities of congressional intervention in foreign policy.

An argument might be made that this complexity, if it acts as a restraint against new foreign adventures, is to the good. The fact that at present it is confusing a policy of withdrawal from adventure might be dismissed as an unfortunate accident, But even giving the Senate the benefit of this point of view does not answer all the questions involved.

It is easy enough to ascribe the increased presidential role in foreign policy since the end of World War II to senatorial abdication or presidential aggression. But unless the climate in which these trends occurred is considered, the results will be unfair to both

World War II changed much in American thinking about foreign affairs. After all, except for the short-lived Franco-American

The recent vote to repeal the Tonkin Gulf treaty arising from the Revolutionary War. the United States consistently refused to enter into treaties of mutual defense until Hitler's policy of "one by one" showed the advantage which American isolation gave to aggressors. NATO, for example, would have been unthinkable before World War I; something very like it was rejected after that struggle, and it was only in the past quarter-century that the existing net of defensive treaties came into being. And the treatles had senatorial support.

> Presidential initiative is far older; commitments by the executive almost invariably preceded congressional declarations of war. But the Hitlerian techniques that made declarations of war mere formalities after the fact, and the Japanese habit of eschewing them altogether, put the routine of a congressional vote in a new light. Moreover, the nuclear bomb, which eliminated the warning interval of mobilization altogether, seemed to place a premium on instant defensive action.

It may well be that it is time to reconsider the governance of foreign policy-not necessarily in respect to declarations of war, but to those actions which might well lead to war. The existing turmoil in the Senate is, donbtiess, in part the result of lack of familiarity with that process, and in part the result of guilt over the Senate's support of policies which have not worked out well. In any case, however, more is needed in this field than mere partisan polemics. The Senate must face up to the full implications of its own responsibilities-and not simply assert its authority.

He did not let his belief that an age qualification fixed by the federal government would require a constitutional amendment get in the way of his signing the legislation and thus clearing the way for the courts to resolve that question.

In the process, the President has saved the most important safeguard in the whole range of civil rights legislation, the Voting Rights Act of 1965. Protected by that law, nearly a million Negro citizens have registered in Southern states; millions more are sure to follow suit, with results that may well change the political face of the

The President made it clear, as he signed the bill, that he is asking the attorney eneral to expedite a court test of the voting-age provision. President Nixon has served the nation well Act, no action was taken by the Senate subcommittee now considering a constitutional amendment on the subject.

But the amendment resolution already has more sponsors than it needs to get through the Senate by the required two-thirds vote. It is necessary only to speed up the machinery there-and to get it started in the House, The real battle then, should the Supreme Court reject the statutory approach, will be to win the approval of three-quarters of the state legislatures.

We share the President's declared enthusiasm for the 18-year-old vote, unmoved by figures showing that young voters in general exercise the franchise even more sparingly than their elders. They are far more mobile, for one thing, being less settled, and are accordingly put at a disadvantage by the outrageous residential requirements which the new law will drastically modify and make uniform.

In any event, whether or not they take advantage of the opportunity to vote is not the crucial consideration. Organizations in Houston, New York, Pittsburgh and Cleveland all failed to produce for party chieftains.

TV Campaigns

In the absence of party loyalty as a political cement, the media take on great importance. Like Howard Samuels in his race against Mr. Goldberg, Messrs. Afterward Ambassador Malik, Soviet representative at the UN, made an important speech in which the first faint hints appeared that it might be possible to explore a settlement in private. The result was secret talks between Malik and Ambassador Philip Jessup for the

I thought China needed a Korean settlement because it was losing too much. He agreed but there were difficulties-I "could not understand."

On Jan. 28, 1954, I lunched with Zhukov in East Berlin. He said: "Well, it is quite a while since you and Bohlen and I arranged Korean armistice . . . after all, they followed the terms that we discussed. Don't you think it is about time that we should have a similar agreement on present problems?"

We'd like to interest you in the common market.

The richest market in the world. It's open to the world, but it's no place for the unknowledgeable.

It's a market that even the big U.S. businessmen come to Chemical Bank for advice on.

We opened up offices in Europe so that. we could offer European businessmen the same kind of service. We've studied their methods and techniques too, so as to help us get a better insight into their problems.

After all, our business is business and not just looking after the company's cash.

If you've got plans for going into America call Chemical Bank and we'll call on you. Together we'll sort out objectives and plans for attack.

Our men in New York—working with experts all over the U.S.—will help you develop new opportunities, find new outlets for your products. And if your marketing effort needs additional finance, we'll arrange that too.

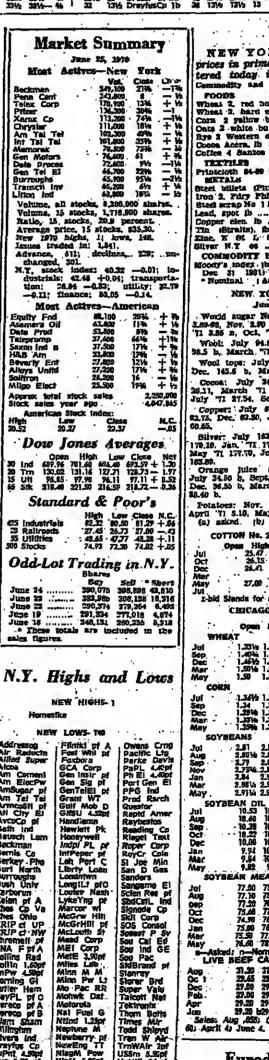

And you don't have to move from your office. Unless, of course, you want to, in which case Chemical Bank in America will take over where we leave off in Europe.

You see, we're common ground for the common market.

Chemical Bank—the not so all american American bank.

BRIDGE

By Alan Truscott

STOCKHOLM, June 25.-The United States captured the world team bridge championship here this afternoon, winning the final with something to spare against the young team representing Nationalist China. The result had been anticipated since the beginning of the contest, for the United States was the only one of the five teams of world

The Aces played outstandingly well in the third match this afternoon, earning 30 victory points, which left the Aces leading in the match 45 to 13, The fourth match tonight was therefore in the nature of an exhibition: the Aces could afford to lose by the maximum, 20 to -5, and still be world champions.

The Chinese can be satisfied with having reached the world final for the second straight year, and having given the Aces a scare by beating them 13 to 7 in the first of the four final matches. The Chinese players were Patrick Huang, M. F. Tai, Elmer Hsiao, Conrad Cheng and Harry Lin, under the captaincy of David Mao.

The Americans won the second match of the finals last night by 37 points, glving them. 18-2 in terms of victory points. Bill Eisenberg and Bob Gold-man played throughout, with the other two pairs each playing half the match.

The second deal of the final caused the audience to analyze furiously. M. F. Tal, sitting South for China, reached four hearts after Mike Lawrence. East for America, had opened one spade. North made a cue-bid of two spades, and raised to game when South rebid his hearts.

At first sight it seems that spade tricks and the ace of hearts. But when Bob Hamman as West led the spade ace and paused for thought, the audisome possibility that the game would be defeated. While the audience analyzed possibilities for the defense, Hamman was studying his partner's slightly mysterious play of the spade ten on the first trick: one would have expected the jack. He decided that it would be in his interest to stop a spade ruff in the dummy so he shifted to a trump and that was that. The heart ace and the spade king were all the defense

PARENTS AND CHILDREN IN MISTOR The Psychology of Family Life in Early Modern France.

By Danid Hunt. Basic Books. 226 pp. $8.95.

Reviewed by Anthony Storr

THIS is one of those interesting books which is the offspring of cross-fertilization. David Hunt is a historian who has also studied psychology at Harvard, and who has had the good fortune to attend Erik Erikson's seminar on the application of psychoanalytic think-ing to the study of life histories. He has also worked as a clinical psychologist at a treatment center for disturbed children. Thus unsually equipped, Dr. Hunt has sought to explore some of the social and cultural determinants which governed the rearing of children in 17thcentury France.

Although Dr. Hunt has adopted, and found valuable, Erikson's scheme of child development and child-parent interaction, he is cautious about making any generalizations himself. "In most cases, we simply do not yet have the theoretical resources to make this kind of functional connection between infantile experience and mature styles of How were intants raised in 17th-century France? By our standards, remarkably cruelly. "In this period, being a good parent did not add to a per-son's standing, and being a bad one brought no discredit . . . Children were treated with con-siderable callousness." One of Dr. Hunt's principal sources is the journal of Jean Héroard, the physician appointed by Henri IV to look after the dauphin, who prematurely became Louis XIII at the age of eight, following his father's assassination. Poor Louis had a bad start in life, since his suc-cession of nurses could not produce enough milk to feed him. The contemporary views of infants seems to have been that they were insatiable monsters; no doubt, as Dr. Hunt points out, because undernour-ishment of adults was common, and substitutes for breastfeeding unsatisfactory.

They were also swaddled, a practice which can be looked upon as an intolerable restric-tion, or else as providing a calming and secure restraint, There is evidence for both points of view. This is rather a good example of the difficulties authors like Dr. Hunt are no against. As Phyllis Greenacre pointed out in her paper on the subject, which Dr. Hunt has also read, much depends upon who does the swaddling, with what attitude towards the infant, with what force and so on. What may be a sedative procedure in one pair of hands may be an britant in another. Even when there is access to so detailed and perceptive a docu-ment as Dr. Heroard's journal, it is impossible to get the kind of information about historical figures that would enable one to relate adult characteristics to their rearing as infants.

The same is not so true of later childhood. They started whipping the dauphin before he was weaned, at the express instruction of his father, who thought it good for children. No wonder he became a somewhat aggressive boy who had temper tantrums. Perhaps the most shocking aspect of these whippings was that they were not immediately administered but postponed till the next morning Although Dr. Bini does not mention it. Hérosid describes the dauphin lying awake or having nightmate. dreading the next day's beating It seems that this regime wa finally successful in breaking his spirit, for the dauphin turn. ed into a king with little an-tonomy, dominated by favorite and by his counselor Richellen Or was it that the early death of his father deprived him of a male exemplar upon, whom he could model his developing masculinity? Once again, the theoretical possibilities cultum the evidence available. "I do so wish I were not king and that my father were still alive," said the eight-year-old child. Would he have been better equipped in they had not whipped him for every gesture of infant independence? The 17th century was less delicate than our own both in regard to sex and excretion, There were some prohibitions about using the immediate environs of the royal apartments as a privy; but when the dauphin soiled the carpet the general reaction was amusement rather than horror, Similarly, infantile sexuality was much more tolerated. Heroarddescribes the dauphin as masturbating, playing sex games with his sister, and even exploring the anatomy of his female attendants. In spite of all this "permissiveness," Louis was bumiliated by his wife, suffered long periods of impotence and eventually, after many years of marriage, fathered achild almost by accident." Louis the Chaste, as he was known did not start that way, but it &still anyone's guess which was the most important of the many possible factors, in his infant rearing that operated against his growing up into s potent male. Dr. Hunt make clear that infantile sexuality was only selectively tolerated and suggests that any closeness of the child to his mother was

In some ways this is a disappointing book - mostly be-cause the author is too honest and doubting a scholar to make it easy for the reader by producing generalizations which he cannot support with evidence What he has attempted to do is, however, of the very greatest interest and importance. If it proves finally impossible to relate psychoana-lytic thinking to history in a meaningful way, it will be because we have not enough do " tailed reporting of the kint . of observations psychoanalysis ductions. Dr. Hunt raises far. more problems than he solves But then this is the function o innovators who are attempting to combine different disciplines actively rebuffed.

Heroics at Home

By Russell Baker

WASHINGTON. — President Nixon's men who understand such things keep advising him to keep advising us not to worry about the way prices keep rising. For mouths now they bave had him ressiuring us that the worst is over and that prices will settle down contentediv somewhere and siay there. In the meantime, prices keep right on rising. So does unemployment. It is

Baker never easy to understand what economists mean when they talk-except when discussing their favorite subject, to wit, the dumbness of the substantial number of other economists who disagree with them-but many of them seem to be saying something interesting about how to stabilize prices.

If they mean what they seem to be saying, prices have been rising hecause there are not enough people out of work, and they will stop rising when unemployment reaches a still unknown magic number. Some believe that, as a general principie, when only 2 or 3 percent of the work force are out of jobs, prices zoom.

One of the papers quoted a Wall Street man the other day on the subject of unemployment reaching the S percent figure, which it did not long ago. He was mightly cheered by the news and said it indicated that prices would soon quit vising. Now. If the country needs more unemployment than it can get in prosperous times it is clear that we bave been on the wrong track for a long time. Viewing the situation sensibly. it is ohvious that unemployment is an honorable form of service to the nation and should be treated as such.

It may be unpleasant. Absence of income often is. But it is curely not much more unpleasant than military service, with its many opportunities for being shot or otherwise maliciously malmed by utter srangers. Figliting inflation is surely just as important as fighting unfriendly nations. We need only ask ourselves whether there would be any Americanism left to defend against enemies abroad if the dollar should collapse. This being the case. the government should quit treating unemployment as though it were something shameful and invest those who serve in It with all the honor

For a beginning the White House might send a letter over the President's signature to every person who loses his job or fails to find one in the first "Congratulations." It should hegin. "Thanks to your obsence of income, the United States is moving ahead trium-phantly in its hattle against inflation. Without your coutribution. 95 percent of the American work force would not be able to eat a sirloin steak that is no more costly today than it was two weeks ago."

due for service to the republic.

Such a letter would go far to cheering a man who had just seen his car repossessed or nad his electricity cut off. From time to time the President might hollor some especially hardcore unemployed for economic heroism, perhaps hy personally foreclosing their mortgages in the White House rose garden.

In the long term, however, some system will have to be installed to permit the government to maintain unemployment at a figure that will not allow inflation to begin. The present inflation, spassently, might never have started had th' government had an army of S percent out of work throughout the 1960s.

An unemployment force of this size is almost impossible to muster through voluntary enlistments, especially when wages are high, Obviously then, the government will have to resort

Should allowances be made for conscientious objectors - those persons of Puritan mentality who believe it morally wrong not to work? Most certainly not, They should have to serve, but the government could allow them to refuse their unemployment compensation.

Wadleigh's 'Woodstock': 'The Film Speaks for Itself'

PARIS.—"The documentary has this: it cannot be denied, and so nothing can move you as much," says Michael Wadielgh, the 28-year-old director of Woodstock

Documentary film has nothing to do with news reporting ("they just want to knock off the peaks, they don't care what's underneath"), nor is it a matter of artful camera angles, "In America very few of the people who make cinema rérité are good cameramen." Mr. Wadleigh says. "They are not at all interested in photography, they use it as a means of getting to people."

The point, as in any good reportage, is to get people to talk and to he. One of Michael Wadleigh's favorite moments in "Woodstock" is when a boy suddenly turns to the camers and talks about his father. "It's like James Dean in 'East of Eden,'" he says.

Michael Waulcigb, born in Ohio, has a shortish beard, long hair and clothes in the serious, post-psychedelic, back-tothe-land style—a plain T-shirt, jeans and hoots. With a couple of partners he heads Paradigm Films tone of the partners was an English major, which, after four years of existence. is harely breaking even. "Our background is tiny, tiny." he says. "I've never made a big film hefore." Wadleigh went into films after quitting Columbia medical school. "Wheu I was studying psychology in medical school," he says, "the new schools were saying that you have to effect a change, not just talk about it. The best of documentaries can be a substitute experience, they can make a change." His first film was a study of "The Vanishing American Newspaper" for television. Other films include "No Vietnamese Ever Called Me Nigger," and works on youth, university problems nod on such political candidates as Richard Nixon and Robert Kennedy, He also directed excellent films of singers Aretha Franklin and James Brown in concert on iocation—"No Andy Williams stuff, but real performances," Wadleigh says. He was a natural for "Woodstock," which is half music and half comment

Before last year's Woodstock Festival in upstate New York took place, its promoters were asking such fantastic sums for film rights that there were no takers. "I had been making a film about climbing mountains," Michael Wadleigb says. "I came down off the mountains and made a deal with the promoters to nut up the cost of the film and the crew and the editing. Twelve cameras shot 120 hours of film.

When the festival's success seemed assured, the big film companies showed interest, and Warner Bros. bought the distribution rights to "Woodstock." handed them a 3-hour 4-minute film and they nearly fell right out of their chairs. Michael Wadleigh says. Critic Pauline Kael led the successful fight to prevent Warner's from cutting it. It has proved to be a hig success and a fine money-maker, though a Plttsburgh critic has blasted Warners for charging $4 a ticket for a youth-oriented film.

Michael Wadleigh, who pulled up to Warners' sumptious Paris office in a battered Volkswagen, is on an European promotional tour for "Woodstock," though his relations with Warners have been very dodgy.

The problem is the promotion of "Woodstock," done with "hippie" headbands, and buttons with "peace, music and love," which most Americans laughed at. At the recent Cannes festival, no one laughed, and various horrors were added, including a prologue and Paris designer Jean Bouquin who dressed premiere guests as hippies and gypsies. A demonstration by American students was taken as rent-a-hippie night, and so overwhelming was the commercialism that when Wadleigh donned a black armband in mourning for the Kent University students, he, too, was thought

"I was raised in Kent, Ohio," Wadlelgh ssys angrily "We made films at Berke-ley aon Columbia, we made two films on SDS. we felt we had a right to say something. What no one realizes," he added bitterly. "is that the distributor has nothing to do with the making of the film. I got angry. I said, don't talk to me, talk to Warner Bros. We were amazed that people would challenge our credentials. After we left Cannes we decided the film speaks for itself. The "Woodstock" has won such unlikely isns as Barry Goldwater and has brought Michael Wadleigh offers to make several Sons of Woodstock, as well as the musi-cal film of "Promises, Promises," Fiction films do not interest him.

At the moment he is much absorbed hy his mountain-climbing films. "The journey theme works very well, as Chaucer knew," he says. "Climbing films are nice because they put people under the kind of stress that produces interesting reactions and evaluations." One of his climbing films had campfire discussions on the various merits of Canadian Club and the wild marijuana that grew along the slopes they were climbing in Afghanistan. The conversation soon developed into a fascinating debate on the generation gap, justice. and the nature of the law, filmed at 21.000 feet.

Michael Wadleigh believes in documentaries as educators and especially admires "Point of Order," the study of McCarthyism in the 50s. France's "The Anderson Platoon" but thinks it was flawed by language problems. He had similar problems trying to film the 1968 students' rehellion in Paris and abandoned the project.

"We ended up digging up cobblestones with the rest," he says. "Cartier-Bresson was there for a week, filming with a helmet and a gas mask. I didn't know who he was, I thought he was an amateur. He had watched us for a long time and said he liked what I was aiming my camera at. We talked snd he asked my name. Then I asked his. .It was like meeting Michelangelo! Theu ali we wanted to do was watch him, MARRYING: Marianne Faithfull, 23, former girl friend of Rolling Stone Mick Jagrer, will wed an Irish peer, Lord Rossmore, 39. Some day, Maybe. We hope to get married some time in the future, Lord Ross-more told the Associated Press. The announcement - came just as British critics were panning Jagger for his portrayal of the Australian Robin Hood Ned Kelly." Miss Paithfull had been m Anstralia with Jagger- lest year to play in the film but went back to England after an ovr dose of drugs put ber in the hospital.

DEAR' OLD BLIGHTY: "the Winemakers Circle of the Navy Department has proposed that Britain henceforth launch its ships with homemade eiderberry wine, instead of that imported stuff. It would the Circle reasons, save the Exchequer about 12 shillings 5 pence ($1.50) a launch. "We have established the precedent of launching Polaris submarines with our wines, said Reg Harden, who works for the Royal Navy Scientific Service and who made the elderberry wine used then "We would be honored to do our bit." Well after all the ships can't taste it.
